Jessica wasn't kidding when she told Brooke to decide between her or Nick. And Brooke chose Nick. She couldn't get enough of him. He was fast and dangerous—things she needed to experience after her chaste upbringing. But above all else, he was fun. And that wasn't so much for Brooke to ask—to have a little fun. Was it?

So when Nick says those three little words that change everything, Brooke starts second guessing her choice but doesn't know if it's too late. Has she lost her childhood best friend to someone she barely knows? Will she be consumed by what Nick has to offer, possibly against her will?

And has she not only lost Jessica, but has Dylan now left her inner circle as well? Brooke feels jealousy she knows she has no right to every time she sees Dylan and Jessica together. And there's nothing she can do about it. Unless she gives up everything she's been fighting for with Nick.

So when the opportunity presents itself, she takes a chance with Dylan. She feels things she knows Nick can't offer—breath-stealing kissing, carefully planned caresses, gentle and consuming love. It would be so easy to fall in love with him, so what's holding her back? How can she be in love with both of them at the same time when they're so utterly different?

But suddenly she's forced to choose between them. Will she choose Nick again—the fun, excitement and danger he offers? Or will Dylan come out on top—the safe, gentle, caring guy she's most recently fallen for?
