Breaking the Hourglass by Frances M. Tate

Detective Daniel Harvey's found standing over the corpse of a serial killer. He expected to be standing over the corpse of the woman in the red dress and the really high heels.... so did the killer who'd followed her into the narrow dark ally.

Life would've been so much easier if expectations... worked.

They worked for Cello. Usually.

Red dresses made perfect bait, predator's blood tasted sublime and human memory was wet paint to smudge at will...

Occasionally there were exceptions... complications.

Harvey didn't expect to be labelled 'vigilante'. He didn't expect to discover vampires exist and he certainly didn't expect the extraordinary things someone would do to become one.

Cello didn't expect to care.
