Encounters with the Archdruid (Chinese Edition) by John McPhee ISBN 7532768554

Encounters with the Archdruid is a famous case in the history of American environmental movements. In 1968, when the environmental protection was in the ascendant, the federal government intended to build a dam in the core zone of Grand Canyon Colorado. David Brauer, the executive director of American Mountain Club, the most important actor of environmentalism, objected to the building of that dam. The author followed Brauer to float downstream on a raft in Colorado river, witnessed and recorded the very meaningful event and moment in the history of American environmental protection movement.
