David Libbey: Penobscot Woodman and River-driver by Fannie Hardy Eckstorm, David Stone Libbey ISBN B0130M9TD8

Fannie Pearson Hardy Eckstorm (1865–1946) was an American writer, ornithologist and folklorist.

David Stone Libbey (1828 - 1904) is another figure for the galaxy of "true American types." David Libbey is a Maine woodsman who "met all the demands of son, husband, father, brother, friend, citizen and soldier, and yet had time for self-education, for aesthetic culture, and for the exercise of a talent by no means meagre." This book is part of the series true American types. The purpose of this series is to show "the sterling American manhood which travels along the by-paths of life rather than the highways of fame." Few can be great men as the world estimates greatness, but the understanding of the qualities that make for heroism in humble lives should be a part of educational equipment everywhere. No finer illustration could be given of the field opened by peace for the development of sturdy manliness and undaunted heroism. This volume tells of the experience and career of one of Maine's expert lumbermen, rough and tumble men who cut white pine trees and drove them downriver to the waiting saw mills.
