Lincoln and Darwin: Two Men Who Shaped the World by Robert L. Henn ISBN 143490640X Abraham Lincoln and Charles Darwin, although worlds apart, were both born on February 12, 1809. Who can believe that two men who share the same birthdate, yet never met each other, could be so similar in so many ways? They had an unquenchable thirst for knowledge and possessed incredibly high capacities of memory and recall. They both had high degrees of self-confidence and, against many odds, persisted with their insightful ideas to understand and explain their respective worlds. As a result, they were two of the most influential, yet controversial, men of their time.

Lincoln and Darwin chronicles the lives of these two historic men by answering the intriguing questions of what was each doing throughout the nineteenth century. What was Lincoln doing while Darwin was sailing on board the HMS Beagle? What was Darwin doing as Lincoln was giving his Gettysburg Address? What was Lincoln doing when Darwin published his Origin of the Species? What was Darwin doing the night Lincoln was assassinated in Ford's Theater?

The lives of these historical figures, who seem so contemporary, provide a fascinating story.
