Not illustrated. 1844 Excerpt: ... up to the middle through bourns and rivers: and then they, being come to the place, do lie down on the ground till those foresaid scouts, which are called the Tinkhell, do bring down the deer. But as the proverb says of a bad cook, so these Tinkhell men do lick their own fingers; for besides their bows and arrows, which they carry with them, we can hear now and then a harquebuss or a musket go off', which they do seldom discharge in vain. Then after we had stayed there three hours or thereabouts, we might perceive the deer appear on the hills round about us (their heads making a show like a wood), which being followed close by the Tinkhell, are chased down into the valley where we lay; then all the valley on each side being way-laid with a hundred couple of strong Irish greyhounds, they are let loose as occasion serves upon the herd of deer, that with dogs, guns, arrows, dirks, and daggers, in the space of two hours, four score fat deer were slain, which after are disposed of some one way, and some another, twenty and thirty miles, and more than enough left for us to make merry withal at our rendezvous." The sport was so exciting to the pilgrim, that he produced two sonnets on the occasion, one of which, at least, does no discredit to his versifying abilities. But the best part of the sport for Taylor, with all his poetical sympathy, is clearly the eating and drinking which accompanies it--" such baking, boiling, roasting, and stewing." " I am sure that in Scotland, beyond Edinburgh, I have been at houses like castles for building; the master of the house, his beaver being his blue bonnet, one that will wear no other shirts but of the flax that grows on his own ground, and of his wife's, daughter's, or servant's spinning; that hath his ...
