The Poems of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow by Henry Wadsworth LONGFELLOW ISBN B001SCWI8Q

A volume of Wadsworth's poems starting with Evangeline. Poets are, according to tradition and numberless historical examples and unhappy race of men, cursed by their sensitivity, plagued by their imaginations, victimised by their emotions, and incapable of adjustment to the requirements of a prosaic world. Wadsworth is an exception. He led a prominent, serene, successful and happy life. He was happy in his ancestry, which on his mother's side led back to John and Priscilla Alden; in the accident of birth that brought him into a home made pleasant by sufficient means, gentle breeding, and unaffected culture; and in the natural surroundings amid which his early and late years were spent. Throughout his life he was happy with his friends, such as Nathaniel Hawthorne, James Russell Lowell, and Charles Eliot Norton; nad he was happy in both his wives. Born in Portland, Maine, on February 27th, 1807, in the same year as Whittier and two years before Poe.
